Administrative Experience

Academic Coordinator Project CRECE 21 University of Puerto Rico, Rio Piedras Campus

This position required to interview and recruit personnel, schedule courses, offer services to schools' staff, assists in arranging meetings with students, academic staff, committees as well as seminars and workshops. Attend meetings, take notes, and maintain students' records. The Project offered graduate courses in linguistics (36 credits) to complete a teacher's certification required by the Department of Education. The courses were specialized in English or Spanish at Elementary or Intermediate level according to an analysis of the participant's academic background. A total of 200 graduated students participated in this project.

Assessor for the Governor's Bilingual Schools Project BEC-21

*Department of Education/ Learning Alliances Company
Bilingual Public Schools in Puerto Rico*

Conducting searches of current educational practices, policies, reforms, assessments and educational research, policy studies and developing a customized program to implement the new curriculum. This new curriculum established the use of English as the language of instruction to teach Science and Math besides English as an additional subject. The change was implemented from pre-kinder to third grade. It also included new applications of virtual lessons with automated scoring technologies. Other tasks included modeling classes, schedule meetings with school personnel, research subjects and outside groups, arranging meetings with regional and local directors, committees, and consultants (for texts and technology) as well as preparing seminars and workshops. A total of 40 teachers at three different schools received the services to impact about 900 elementary level students.

Research Projects Experience

Project: Spanish in the Media (TV, Radio and Press) directed by the UNAM University, Mexico

Aug. 2001 to May 2003

Directed (in Puerto Rico) by Dr. Maria Vaquero, Head of the Linguistics Graduate Program of the University of Puerto Rico. The project focused on conversation analysis (from TV and radio programs) and written discourse analysis (from newspapers and general literature). It was titled International Broadcasting of the Spanish in Radio, TV and Newspapers (Difusión Internacional del Español por Radio, Televisión y Prensa, DIES-RTP) and was directed by the UNAM University (Mexico) in collaboration with other universities in Latin America and Europe. The most important duties included making transcriptions of the TV and radio programs, processing the data following the program's set of markup symbols, analyzing and tagging each word of the corpus, checking and validating coding of linguistic data. The validation was completed based on the semantic and morphological criteria. Once it was coded the data was analyzed and presented in statistics to demonstrate different information as the frequency of local lexicon vs. international variety, frequency and syntactical usage of adjectives and adverbs, frequent errors in conversation analysis, usage of metaphoric language, syntactic parsing, foreign words in discourse, vocabulary diversification, etc. A data base was created for the graduate students of the Linguistics Graduate Program of the University of Puerto Rico. Publications and talks have been presented based on the results of the project.
